The Need of The Hour.

In these days of political turmoil and strife, when the blood is hot and every nerve at its highest tension it will do every man good to stop a moment and seriously consult with himself over the situation. Every man who is true; who honestly wants the country to build up and progress; whose ambitions and aspirations are for virtue, truth and right to prevail; who delights in peace and good will cannot do a better thing, than to withdraw to some quiet, solitary place and there dispassionately reason with himself as to the position he occupies and how much he contributes, if anything, to the welfare of the country.

We could not do a better thing for ourselves, our children, our neighbors and the country at large than to try to determine the cause of so much bitterness, strife and turmoil, and if the individual making the investigation finds that he is aiding, or contributing to it, then it is his duty, as a good citizen, to face about, reverse his course of action and strive to overcome the evil by good.

It requires a strong will, indomitable courage, and manly convictions to stand up for the right these days. Public opinion and popular clamour controls many a man's actions and frequently causes men to do things which they know is not right and which will bring regret and remorse. One of the most striking illustrations of this fact is frequently witnessed in South Carolina in the case of lynchings. These result from excitement and hot blood which is largely created by public sentiment or popular clamour at the moment. The very time, the time of all times, when men should let reason and sober judgment control them they give way to passion, prejudice and the spirit of revenge. This is all wrong for there is one who has said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay."

Again, while it is true there are differences among men in political matters, these differences should be honest differences and should not be carried to such extremes as to cause hard thoughts or unkind words. It is a high privilege a man enjoys when he is given the right of suffrage, and he should regard the ballot which he holds in his hand as a most sacred trust. The little white messenger wheels a silent power for good or evil, and before it is deposited in the box serious and thoughtful consideration should guide the hand that holds it. Men should ask themselves before they vote if that ballot in their honest, unprejudiced heart is for the best interest of the country. Are the men I am about to vote for sober, true, honest, upright, Godfearing men? Are they seeking the office from selfish motives? Will they make the best officers? How does their past life compare with their political promises? These and many similar questions should be duly and well considered by every man in connection with every candidate who asks his suffrage. And they should be considered without malice, prejudice or ill will as between man and man. Not what Mr. A thinks of this candidate or that one; not what Mr. B has said; not what the newspapers say or anybody else, but what and who is the man I am going to cast my vote for.

There never was a time in all the history of the world when there was a greater need of pure, true men. The forces of evil are all conspiring to overthrow truth and virtue, honesty, purity, good will, love. There is real admiration for the man who dares to do right, who will let his face against the wrong, who clings to the love of good and a contempt and scorn for evil. The man among men is one who has made himself true and virtuous; the man who is pure, brave, and kind. That man is one in whom God is well pleased and whom men delight to honor. Reader, are you one of this kind? If not aim at it and you cannot fail.
